Abstract

In the current day and age, it is impossible for a company to avoid the use and integration of web applications in their day to day. Company websites are more than commonplace and contain a plethora of information for the customer, employees, and owners. This information can range from mundane to vital, and as such a proper level of care and diligence in the form of security must be put in place. From passwords to credit cards, addresses to mother's maiden names; the importance of security for company web applications is of the utmost importance. For this reason, Ricks Greasy Spoon has asked for a penetration test on the security of their humble web application, producing a thorough report from the findings.

The report dives into the methodology of the penetration test, step by step. Specifically, the OWASP Web Application Methodology was used to conduct this penetration test. This methodology was used for its general and thorough plan to ensure that security risks are found and dealt with accordingly.

From this penetration test, the web application had a plethora of vulnerabilities discovered, including several login faults, SQL Injections, as well as several enumeration susceptibilities. This report gives several suggestions as to how to mitigate these security vulnerabilities in the future to ensure attackers cannot infiltrate Ricks Greasy Spoon web application.

1 INTRODUCTION

1.1 BACKGROUND

“Half of businesses and around a third of charities report having experienced some form of cyber security breach or attack in the last 12 months.” (Ell, 2024)

The importance of online security in an overwhelmingly online reality cannot be understated. The statistics of data breaches, phishing attacks, and others onto unsuspecting small to large businesses are all too alarming to the everyday consumer and producer. Cybercrime is arguably the number one concern for all businesses in modern day.

Without the proper security measures and consistent checkups, a company leaves themselves at risk of being the victim of an attack. This attack can lead to sensitive data, revenue, and more losses and hijacked buyers across the globe. With a reputation of lax and vulnerable security, a company can seldom find a way out of the changing tides of modern business. A single data breach could cost a company enough revenue to bankruptcy, and it is this reason that security is imperative to success.

For these reasons, Ricks Greasy Spoon has hired a penetration tester to ensure their online security is up to date in the current cyber landscape. The penetration tester gave a report of their results, giving feedback on any risks that make themselves known. The tester will then offer suggestions on how to mitigate these risks as well as suggesting work further down the line after testing has concluded.

1.2 AIMS

This test aims to discover all vulnerabilities within the Greasy Spoons web application. These vulnerabilities are given to Ricks Greasy Spoon in the form of a penetration testing report. The report lays out clearly each vulnerability discovered and a proper countermeasure for vulnerability. Due to this, the tester is required to attempt and hijack sensitive information from the website that otherwise a user should not have access towards.

Utilizing the OWASP Web Application Penetration Testing Methodology, the tester can achieve their goals laid out above (OWASP, 2023). This methodology clearly lays out many varying attacks one might use on a web application and gives a clear framework and outline for the test. This outline helps organize and keep the tester focused on each level of the attack.

Once the test has been conducted, the tester will write their findings and solutions for any vulnerabilities in the report, clearly articulating ways to mitigate security risks in the future.

2 METHODOLOGY

2.1 OVERVIEW OF PROCEDURE

2.1.1 OWASP

For the purposes of this penetration test the OWASP Web Application Security Testing Methodology was utilized (OWASP, 2023). Due to its heralded acclaim as a well-rounded and robust model, the OWASP Methodology is the perfect baseline for the testing that follows. Furthermore, due to the expansive nature of the methodology at hand, not every section within will apply to the web application of Rick's Greasy Spoon. Those sections are omitted from the sequencing below.

1. Information Gathering
2. Configuration and Deployment Management Testing
3. Identity Management Testing
4. Authentication Testing
5. Authorization Testing
6. Session Management Testing
7. Input Validation Testing
8. Error Handling
9. Cryptography
10. Business Logic Testing
11. Client-side Testing

In the Appendix D there is a list of all the steps that have been removed from this testing. The testing utilized several different tools, including Kali Linux, OWASP tools, nmap, and telnet as well as other various accredited software applications such as Metasploit.

2.1.2 Kali Tools

Throughout the testing process, several Open-source tools and applications were used to properly discover and evaluate vulnerabilities. Below is a comprehensive list of the services and a description of what the tester looks to achieve whilst utilizing them.

2.1.2.1 Nmap v7.9.2

Network mapper, otherwise, known as nmap, is an open-source utility for network discovery and security auditing (Nmap, 2022). The tools have many features that allow for a user to audit a web service as well as any networking protocols that might be connected to its many features. Nmap provides users with the ability to ping services and is incredibly useful during the fingerprinting process of any penetration test. Nmap has the ability to:

- Discover Hosts
- Scan ports

- Detect Operating System
- Scripting
- Evade Firewalls
- Detect Versions of Services

2.1.2.2 Nikto v2.1.6

Nikto is another open-source web server scanning service that identifies avenues where vulnerabilities might reside. Nikto provides a general report on the web as well as information on server versions (CISA, 2024). Due to its proficiency with vulnerability identification, nikto will be used extensively throughout the testing process.

2.1.2.3 DirB v2.22

Dirb is an application used to discover potential hidden directories that are accessible to the user that otherwise would be obscured. Dirb will enumerate potential web server links on the web application and determine whether these links are currently operational. Dirb allows users to input a custom wordlist as well, allowing customizable scans to ensure the user can functionally enumerate their web application.

2.1.2.4 Burpsuite v2022.7.1

Burpsuite is a comprehensive penetration testing tool that provides a plethora of services to the end users. Burpsuite provides several generic tools, including (Vaadata, 2024):

- Spider
- Scanning
- Web Proxy
- Web Repeater
- Web Intruder
- Web Sequencer
- Web Extender
- Collaborator

Several of these services will be used during the testing process, providing information for the user to determine and discover vulnerabilities.

2.1.2.5 OWASP Zap v2.11.1

Zap is an application created by OWASP for the specific intention of being utilized to aid penetration testing. The service is similar to burpsuite, however the provided software differs in important areas, potentially discovering vulnerabilities that burpsuite missed during its scanning. The services OWASP Zap provides are as follows (OWASP, 2024):

- Proxy
- Spider
- Scanner
- Passive Scanning

- Active Scanning
- Fuzzing
- Cross-Site Scripting
- Penetration Reporting

2.1.2.6 SQLmap v1.6.7

SQLmap is a powerful tool that seamlessly automates the process of testing potential SQL Injections (SQLmap, 2024). Due to the powerful nature of SQLmap, the tool was used to as a “work checker”, assisting the tester when potential SQL Injections are found to have merit. The tester chose to avoid overuse of SQLmap, as the tool can blind the tester from more obvious vulnerabilities due to its power.

2.1.2.7 Whatweb v0.5.5

Whatweb is a tool that determines services and technologies running on the web server. This tool is primarily used during the fingerprinting process of the OWASP methodology, and as such will mainly be used early in the testing process.

2.1.2.8 Wfuzz v3.1.0

Wfuzz is an open-source application mainly providing fuzzing functionality to the testing process. Wfuzz often will use brute-forced techniques to provide a comprehensive fuzzing report for the tester. This report will provide information on several vulnerable services that the web application provides whilst also determining what processes on the web application are properly secured.

2.1.2.9 SSLscan v2.0.15

SSLscan is a kali command line tool that scans SSL configurations implemented on a web server. SSLscan will provide protocol versions, cipher suites, key exchanges, signature algorithms, and certificates in use to the tester (Kali, 2024). These services are used for security purposes, preventing malicious attacks from being conducted on the web service. SSLscan can determine whether there are SSL services on the web server as well as what these services are and their proper functionality.

2.2 INFORMATION GATHERING

2.2.1 Fingerprint Web Server

OWASP describes fingerprinting as “the task of identifying the type and version of (a) web server that a target is running on.” (OWASP, 2023) For this task, the tester chose to use a few tools in nmap and telnet to achieve this goal.

Utilizing the -sV flag within the nmap command line framework displays the services currently running on the host.

└─$ nmap -sV 192.168.1.10
Starting Nmap 7.92 ( https://nmap.org ) at 2024-10-22 06:06 EDT

The services found within this nmap scan are as follows

- FTP – File Transfer Protocol using ProFTPD 1.3.4a on port 21.
- HTTP - Hypertext Transfer Protocol using Apache version 2.4.3 with PHP version 5.4.7 on port 80.
- MySQL – An unauthorized MySQL database on port 3306.

Utilizing telnet on each of the open ports reveals that there appears to be a service blocking access to the database. On top of this, grabbing the banner for the HTTP port reveals the same Apache and PHP information found in nmap.

</body></html>

2.2.2 Review Webserver Metafiles for Information Leakage

The next step in the methodology involves identifying hidden paths through metadata files. Specifically, searching for a Robots.txt, Security.txt, or Humans.txt file within the paths. Going to the browser and typing 192.168.1.10/robots.txt reveals this webpage:

Traversing to 192.167.1.10/AMYDDMUTEITS/doornumbers.txt reveals a webpage with access codes to the doornumbers in the building.

2.2.3 Enumerate Applications on Webserver

This step involves a more elaborate fingerprinting scan on the webserver, scanning through all available ports thoroughly to sniff out any obscured ports. Despite this, no further open ports were discovered in this more rigorous scan of the webserver. The tester can thus assume that these are the only open ports.

2.2.4 Review Webpage Content for Information Leakage

Many webpages have information hiding within the comments of the source code. This next step involves diving into the html and CSS of these documents for any comments or pieces of information that might reveal themselves. For this, the tester downloaded the source code for each webpage and viewed it externally through the Kali Linux default code editor.

Reviewing the code led to no obvious vulnerabilities at this time. However, there was a custom-script.js file with a dead link www.arctechventures.com embedded inside.

/*=====
Item Name: Somaiya Vidyavihar - Captive Portal
Version: 3.1
Author: Arctech Ventures
Author URL: http://www.arctechventures.com
===== */

2.2.5 Identify Application Entry Points

This next step involves mapping the webpages and how they link to one another via links and entry points. The webpages will be put into a table as follows:

- Main webpage, prior to login
 - Login
 - Username
 - Password
 - Register Now
 - Username
 - Name
 - Password
 - Phone
- Main webpage, post login
 - Edit Details
 - Username
 - Name
 - Email
 - Phone
 - Address

- Profile Picture
- Change Password
 - Old password
 - New password
- Order
 - All Orders
- Tickets
 - All Tickets
- Log Out

Using OWASP Zap, the tester was able to view the POST and GET requests as they were snooping through the webpages. Nothing drew an alarm to the tester from here.

2.2.6 Map Execution Paths Through Application

This next step involved mapping the target application and understanding the webpage workflows. To map the webpage properly, a spider was run to identify all webpages that are present in the webpage environment. OWASP Zap's built in spider was used to determine that 94 webpages were found linked. These URLs can be found in Appendix B.

To ensure that the webpage has been properly mapped, the tester utilized a Linux built in tool known as dirb to snoop out any possibly hidden webpages. The results of this can be found below in Appendix E.

2.2.7 Fingerprint Web Application Framework

Finally, the tester looked to fingerprint the components utilized by the web application. Tools that were used to achieve this consist of curl, Nikto, and dirb. Two dirbusting commands were used to find any webpages not currently known to the tester. Another program, gobuster, was run with the big.txt dirb file to ensure the file paths were all located. The result of this can be found below:

2.3 CONFIGURATION AND DEPLOYMENT MANAGEMENT TESTING

2.3.1 Test Application Platform Configuration

After several steps of fingerprinting OWASP instructs the tester in its methodology to conduct different stages of a black-box or grey-box test. The tester ensures on this step that there are no remnants of debugging from the web developer left over on the deployed webpage. The tester will utilize tools such as Nikto on Kali Linux to conduct several examinations of the webpage.

[illegible]

On top of the Nikto scan, the tester utilized the OWASP Zap Active Scan on the webpage to further find leaks from the development stage. The results of this can be found in Appendix A.

2.3.2 Enumerate Infrastructure and Application Admin Interfaces

For this step of the OWASP testing process the tester attempts to discover any admin webpages and data that can be discovered by a threat actor on the webpage. Utilizing the Nikto and dirb scans from earlier the tester discovers the /admin/ folder which contained an exclusive admin login webpage. On top of this, the vulnerability from earlier referenced brute force vulnerabilities on the web server, implying a threat actor could brute force admin login from this webpage to get unwarranted access.

2.3.3 Test HTTP Strict Transport Security

HTTP Strict Transport Security, otherwise known as HSTS, is the web security protocol to ensure all HTTP traffic is transferred to HTTPS. All secure webpages contain this feature, and the tester ensures in this step that the webpage follows suit. Utilizing curl on Kali Linux results in no response from the command line, implying that there is no HTTPS protocol set in place to transfer webpage data to the server, leaving webpage data vulnerable to threat actors.

2.4 IDENTITY MANAGEMENT TESTING

2.4.1 Test Role Definitions

OWASP defines four separate user roles for a webpage.

- Administrator
- Auditor
- Support Engineer
- Customer

With sqlmap, the tester can enumerate through each of the roles effortlessly through the /admin/ section of the webpage. Within sqlmap, the username input was found to be vulnerable to SQL injections, allowing the tester to theorize several methods to access admin controls later in the test.

2.4.2 Test User Registration Process

Through this step in the testing process the login process was thoroughly evaluated for weaknesses and exploitative windows. It is important for webpages in the current day to have properly robust login processes that do not allow for weak or duplicate information to be inputted. The tester examined the login of the webpage and inputted the same information twice into two separate accounts to ensure duplicate accounts could not be created. Not only would registering with duplicate accounts be possible, but the overall log in process showed several weaknesses.

The tester inputs the following information into the registration:

- Username: aaaaaa
- name: aaaaaa
- password: aaaaaa

- phone: 1111

Firstly, the passwords do not have an appropriate number of requirements. The only set requirement is at least 5 characters in length, which in modern day is laughably lax. Adding a longer length requirement on top of special character and capitalization requirements ensures strong password construction that can hold up to other current login processes.

Secondly, phone numbers are not even required to be valid UK phone numbers. Due to this, a user can incorrectly input their phone number without the server informing them of their misinput. On top of this, there is no check to validate that another user does not currently possess the same phone number already.

2.4.3 Testin for Weak or Unenforced Username Policy

As previously mentioned, the login process is shockingly lax. Whilst trying to log in the only requirement for username is that its length is 5 characters in length. A username such as 'aaaaa' is as simple and guessable as a username can get on the current restrictions.

2.5 AUTHENTICATION TESTING

2.5.1 Testing for Credentials Transported over Unencrypted Channels

The tester attempted next to determine if there are any avenues for an attacker to find data through unencrypted channels. As previously stated, the web server is already accessed via a nonsecure connection, leaving the end user and their data vulnerable to attackers. However, the tester attempted to discover other key instances where user data could be compromised.

Using curl once more, the tester attempted to find a sessionID token through the login page. The header was snagged as shown below:

(kali@kali) ~$ curl -kis http://192.168.1.10/login.php
HTTP/1.1 200 OK
Date: Tue, 22 Oct 2024 18:40:10 GMT

Pragma: no-cache
Content-Length: 3775
Content-Type: text/html

The PHPSESSID token is easily accessed here as well as through inspecting the data of the webpage and finding the cookies involved. This also included a secret cookie found in the same area.

2.5.2 Testing for Default Credentials

When developing a webpage there are several “dummy” login credentials that developers will use when testing their product. The tester examined several common login credentials to determine if any weak login exists with authentication.

- test/test
- user/user
- admin/admin
- rick/rick

As can be seen above, the default credentials used on the webpage appear to not be in use, confirming that the webpage is secure in this regard.

2.5.3 Testing out Weak Lock Out Mechanism

The tester proceeded on attempting to log into weak login credentials. On a webpage with mechanisms such as lockout and 2FA, a threat actor should have a difficult time accessing accounts information. The webpage was brute forced until failure, and it was determined that there is no lock out mechanisms in place. Login allows for an infinite number of attempts to log into accounts under as well as no two-factor authentication. There is no evidence of a captcha either, or the tester can conclude no lock out system is set in place.

2.5.4 Testing for Weak Password Policy

As previously stated, the login form has minimal requirements set onto it. The user is allowed to input weak login information at a whim thus leading to vulnerable accounts to be accessed. The password policy of the webpage was thus tested to determine how complex a password on the webpage needs to be. As can be seen in Figure 2.4.5, the only security measure placed on the password process is a five-character length, which is far too weak for a modern webpage. There are no special character, capitalization, or numbering requirements set on the passwords either, leading them to have a quite weak standard on their webpage.

2.6 AUTHORIZATION TESTING

2.6.1 Testing Directory Traversal File Include

From the OWASP methodology the tester looked to find vulnerabilities in the file traversal of the webpage. Many webpages have several subpages accessible to the end users just by looking at their file extensions. From the dirb scan done from Figure 2.2.8, the tester can see several file extensions on the webpage, most interesting of which being /admin/, /reports/, and /includes/. From the scans done during the fingerprinting tests, such as gobuster, dirb, and nikto the tester found several files accessible to the end user. These files range from the images on the webpage to the door lock numbers found earlier in the testing.

2.7 SESSION MANAGEMENT TESTING

2.7.1 Testing for Session Management Schema

The secret cookies found earlier in the testing reveal a PHPSESSID token that is unique to all users. When running burpsuite the tester was able to find this PHPSESSID secret cookie whilst logging onto the “hacklab” account. Copying this cookie and inputting into another browser allowed the tester to log onto the hacklab account without needing to input any credentials.

Cookie: PHPSESSID=qe8ah2pmln5007notuklrqlp0
Connection: close

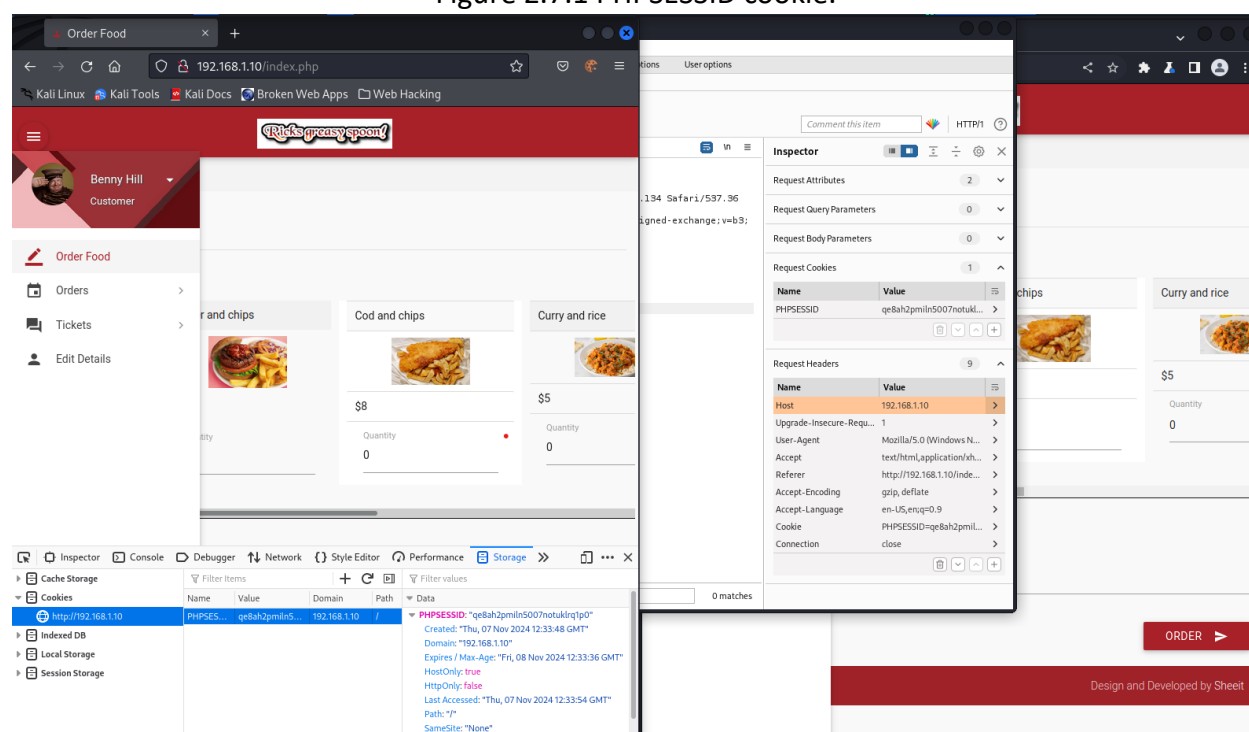

Figure 2.7.2 Successful login to hacklab account without credentials.

2.7.2 Testing for Cookies Attributes

Due to the website using HTTP protocol rather than its secure counterpart, the cookies transported throughout are vulnerable to attackers. The Secret Cookie from Figure 2.6.1 is seamlessly captured by threat actors without any form of sanitizing or security measures enacted.

2.7.3 Testing for Session Fixation

The process displayed in figure 2.6.2 is known as Session Hijacking and is a result of unsecure cookies being transported through the webpage. The account information of users is vulnerable to any threat actor who can get ahold of these easily accessible PHPSESSID tokens that display themselves to the browser. Tools like Burp Suite, OWASP Mantra, and CyberChef are easily able to capture cookies especially when the protocols for the webpage are HTTP over HTTPS.

2.7.4 Testing for Logout Functionality

The tester navigated to the <http://192.168.1.10/orders.php> webpage whilst logged onto the hacklab account to properly test whether the server properly locked websites to non-logged in users. Logging out on the webpage and attempting to navigate back results in the users being redirected to login.php. Sensitive data on end users is inaccessible to the tester once logged out of the account.

2.7.5 Testing Session Timeout

A proper webpage would track the users' time idle on the site and logged them out after a certain time has elapsed. However, after being logged in idle to the webpage for over a day the user remains logged in. On top of this, after logging out of the account manually, the PHPSESSID token remains the same as it were, without destroying or rendering this token useless.

2.8 INPUT VALIDATION TESTING

2.8.1 Testing for Stored Cross Site Scripting

Cross Site Scripting is one of the most pivotal avenues attackers use on vulnerable webpages to infiltrate unwanted information. The tester used tools such as burp suite and wfuzz to help identify any weak points on the webpage that might be abused by these threat windows. Below is the header of the wfuzz scan, which showed a plethora of windows for the tester to work around.

(kali@kali)-[~]
$ wfuzz -c -z file,/usr/share/wordlists/wfuzz/Injections/All_attack.txt --hc 404 http://192.168.1.10/login.php/FUZZ

Once the wfuzz scan identified several vulnerabilities, the tester snooped around the webpage logged into the hacklab account to identify any susceptible pages. Navigating to the tickets.php webpage, the tester noticed a “status” variable in the webpage description. Changing the value of this to an SQL injection dropped all the tickets on the account and deleted them without warning.

2.8.2 Testing For Incubated Vulnerability

From discovering Cross-Site Scripting vulnerabilities, the tester then began to conduct tests on the file upload portion of a user's profiles. A user can upload and photo seemingly as their profile picture from their personal device. However, when uploading an extension, such as .txt or .bat, the server does not allow the user to upload these files, displaying a popout as shown below:

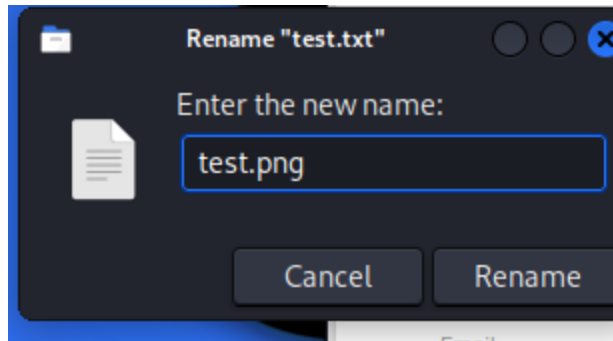

2.8.3 text.txt document attempted upload.

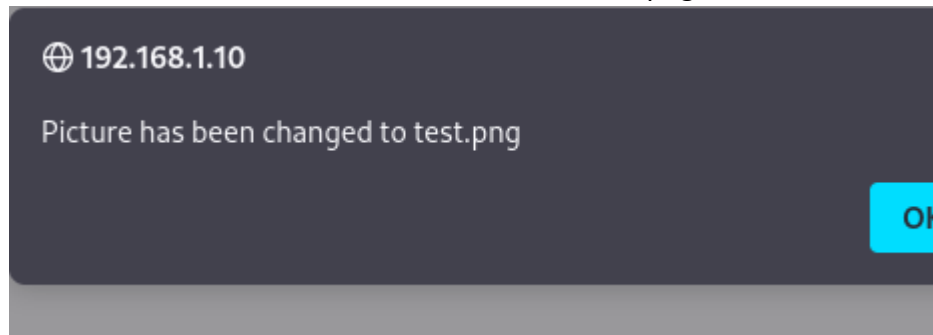

2.8.4 .txt extension not allowed.

From this the tester changed the file extension, however, did not change the contents within, and determined that the server does not check the contents of the actual file attempting upload and only checks the extension that can easily be changed. This can be seen in the figure below:

2.8.5 test.txt renamed to test.png

2.8.6 successfully changed profile to test.png.

2.9 TESTING FOR ERROR HANDLING

2.9.1 Testing for Improper Error Handling

The tester found a webpage phpMyAdmin that had a login service inside. This login, when unaccepted paths to an “Authentication Required” webpage. However, the web server version as well as the php version is on display to the reader when they otherwise should be hidden, as shown in Figure 2.8.1.

2.10 TESTING FOR WEAK CRYPTOGRAPHY

2.10.1 Testing for Weak Transport Layer Security

Previously in the testing process, the lack of security protocols present has been a major concern from the tester. The lack of https in favor of the less secure, easily exploitable counterpart in http drew major alerts from the tester. From this, the tester runs a simple sslscan on the webpage displaying that there are no security protocols in place blocking malicious attackers from exploiting the webpage.

2.11 BUSINESS LOGIC TESTING

2.11.1 Test Ability to Forge Request

From the Input Validation Testing section of this report there were several SQL Injections found to be functional on the webpage. The tester gained access to several sensitive web server access points which included tables containing several user data entries. With these vulnerabilities present the internal database of the web server is left open to the tester.

2.11.2 Test Number of Times a Function Can Be Used Limits

In section 2.5.3 the tester discovered that the login for the webpage did not contain any lock out mechanism. Lock out mechanisms are great structures that prevent brute force enumerated attacks on systems to be properly conducted, and the lack of this system allows for the tester to enumerate through several logins as can be determined in section 2.5.3.

2.11.3 Test Upload of Unexpected File Types

In section 2.8.2 the tester determined that hostile files could be uploaded onto the user's profile by simply changing their extension from an invalid type, such as .bat or .txt, to a valid type such as .png or .jpg. Without checking the content of the file being uploaded, simply .bat scripts can gain access to the services on the webpage, including sensitive user data or remote code executions.

3 DISCUSSION

3.1 VULNERABILITIES DISCOVERED AND COUNTERMEASURES

3.1.1 Robots.txt

As revealed in Section 2.1.2, the robots.txt webpage extension contains sensitive information that end users should not be given access to. Robots.txt is meant to be a publicly available file that can inform search engines what URLs on the site they are able to access (Google, 2024). However, the contents within the Greasy Spoon's robots.txt file are sensitive door numbers that should not be given to any search engine let alone end users.

A mitigation for this problem would be to simply examine and alter the data contained within the robots.txt file. The web developer should never implement sensitive data to such an accessible web extension as threat actors will be quick to find these avenues of attack. The robots.txt file is meant for web crawlers, not for end users. Thus, the data pertained to the website should be formatted in such a way that these crawlers will be able to read whilst the end users are unable to get anything sensitive from the data.

3.1.2 Secret Cookies

Burpsuite brought to light that the secret cookies unique to each session on the webpage were publicly available to all users. Looking back at Section 2.4.1 the PHPSESSIONID cookie was blatantly available and with this the user session could be copied and modified by a threat actor at will. Copying the cookie to another browser starts the same session allowing third parties to log into accounts without needing the credentials, rather just the session cookies.

Using the HttpOnly flag on the cookie obscures it from the end users preventing any malicious actors from abusing the session. Attacks, such as Cross-site Scripting attacks, utilize these cookies to compromise user data and the HttpOnly flag ensures these attacks are unable to grab such sensitive data (Nidecki, 2020).

3.1.3 Visible Directories

The webpages /admin, /reports, and /includes all displayed directories for the web application routing to several previously obscured pages. A user should not be allowed to navigate to access these directories as the webpages often contain sensitive data end users should not see. The results from the nikto and dirbs scans similarly discovered a plethora of easily accessible websites that users are not meant to navigate towards. Users having access to potentially sensitive files as well as the entire structure of the web application is concerning and leaves the site exposed to potential threats.

To mitigate this concern, the script .htaccess on the Apache server restricts users from seeing the directories (Apache, 2024). They will obscure the directory listings, allowing for user and server data to be protected through permissions. To completely disable directories altogether, the Apache terminal has a command to restrict these. Simply typing Options -Indexes will disable all directories on the web server, preventing potential vulnerabilities from exposing themselves (Apache, 2024).

3.1.4 Enumeration

The login.php webpage when prompted with an invalid username would inform the end user that the username was not found in the webpage. Due to this fact, the tester was able to check username after username until a different prompt that showed the username was displayed valid. When an account is not found on the database, often the end user does not need to know if the username or the password was the reasoning for the failure. If there is a malicious actor looking to brute their way into an account a prompt informing them whether their username is in the database would be more than helpful.

To counteract this, there should be no distinction for when a username or password is found invalid. The end user should only be informed that their account has not been found regardless of what information failed. The database needs to remain obscure to end users to ensure that their data is kept safe to attackers.

3.1.5 Login Attempts

The same login that will notify users if their username is not found is brimming with other flaws. Most notably, the login page allows consumers to have an unlimited, unrestricted number of attempts to log into the webpage. This allows for a malicious actor to run a dictionary of login details until one happens to successfully log in by chance. This is known commonly as a brute force attack and is easily mitigated against. An attacker can always discover a password through a brute force attack (OWASP, 2024), so it is vital for the web app developer to prevent such an attempt from transpiring.

One common way to mitigate these attempts is through a lockout system. A lockout system locks out sessions from attempting a login for a set time interval after too many failed attempts. This can easily be implemented by going into the javascript of the webpage and creating a variable that tracks the failed attempts. This can then be used to restrict the webpage to the end user once they have failed multiple times. Another common solution against these brute force attacks would be to implement a CAPTCHA service. Captcha is an acronym for “Completely Automated Public Turing Test to tell Computers and Humans Apart.” (Cloudflare, 2022). Implementing this onto the webpage would force users to have to physically click a checkbox every attempt, greatly impeding on brute force method of attack.

3.1.6 HTTP vs HTTPS

The web application made the consequential decision to run the service though HTTP protocol rather than its secure counterpart. The issues with HTTP lie in the handling of user data, where there are no checks and balances to ensure encryption or security with data. The result of this is a web application susceptible to web crawlers and packet tracers, issues that are rudimentary to many web apps in the current modern web environment. Switching swiftly to https would ensure a base level of security with end users that should be expected of all companies handling their data.

3.1.7 Admin Password

Section 2.3.2 went over the weaknesses within the account registration process. The most notable concern from this dealt with the weak requirements for user passwords. The password requirements found on the web application were minimal at best, requiring only a length of five characters. The main concern is that these weak passwords are easily guessed by dictionaries that are enumerated on known usernames. From this, user data is considered exposed if such a process is allowed to be ran on a web application.

The UK government has a minimum expected requirement for passwords on a database. These requirements are as follows: (Gov.uk, 2022)

- Password length at minimum is 8 characters
- No maximum length
- Omit commonly guessed passwords
- Require at least 1 upper case, 1 number, and 1 special character.

Following these guidelines can ensure that users have safer, harder to guess passwords that protect their data from threat actors. Any requirement that increases the number of characters a dictionary would have to parse works to protect from malicious attacks that now have to take an exponential amount of time more enumerating than otherwise.

3.1.8 SQL Injection

From rigorous SQL injections and Cross-Site Scripting testing done earlier in the testing, the webpage was found mostly secure from these attacks. However, when the tester attempted SQL injections on the complaints webpage, the attack was able to drop all notes left on the page erasing them from the database. This security flaw concerns a more malicious attack would be able to find access points to more sensitive user data and potentially copy, destroy, or expose their data.

To mitigate these concerns, the tickets.php webpage must use the $stmt user parameter to separate SQL from user inputs. On top of this, the user input must be sanitized, which prevents SQL from reading their input even if the raw text is SQL code. Preventing users from inputting SQL into text boxes protects not only their own sensitive data but the database. There is a potential concern that more tables could be dropped than just the tickets table, preventing such exposure is of the utmost importance for the web developer.

3.1.9 Upload Files

When the tester navigated to the details.php webpage, there appeared to be a file upload option for profile pictures. An alert window appeared, informing the user that only .png or .jpg file extensions were allowed. However, when the tester changed a .bat file extension to .png, the file was able to be uploaded despite not being an image. This showed the tester that the restriction was merely checking the raw text extension, rather than the data itself.

To prevent this, the details.php webpage should have the PATHINFO_EXTENSION utilized on any file uploads. This will filter the files to ensure malicious attacks from .bat files are prevented from being uploaded onto the webpage. These attacks leave user data exposed to several avenues of attack, as batch files can contain a plethora of hacking tools within. From Cross-Site Scripting to web crawlers a batch file leaves the database under threat. The prevention of uploading such malicious files will prevent user data from possible exposure to attacks.

3.1.10 Database Version

The apache server version that the web application ran on during the test was found to be severely out of date. Version 2.4.3 was released over a decade prior to the testing and had several known vulnerabilities. The list of these vulnerabilities contained a plethora of remote code execution vulnerabilities, mainly dealing with several modules on the Apache software (Apache, 2024). On top of this, there are several denial of service (DoS) attacks that are able to be ran on server protocols (Apache, 2024). Furthermore, there are several information disclosure vulnerabilities as well, just to know three critically exposed vectors of attack.

Since Apache 2.4.3 has been released since 2014 the software has several known vulnerabilities. The test recommends that the service be upgraded to the proper up to date software Apache provides. This will prevent these vulnerabilities from costing Greasy Spoon's company time, money, and resources that would otherwise be used for their profits.

3.2 OVERALL DISCUSSION

Ricks Greasy Spoon runs a webpage that leaves much to be desired. The plethora of vulnerabilities present on the application provide minimal security against attacks and leaves user data susceptible and at risk. The systems at play require immediate attention in several noteworthy areas and will require substantial work to mitigate any further damage. With a simplistic rendition of the OWASP methodology model, the test concluded that these flaws will only exasperate with time, inferring that immediate attention is required.

The system has several issues pertaining to the login webpage. The required log in for accounts is lax, forgiving, and easily enumerated against. Several different third-party applications were found to have the ability to snoop against easily guessed account information. The services that the web application was also found to be severely out of date, some utilizing software over a decade old. The systems were found to have several different SQL Injection sites as well as Cross-Site Scripting avenues present throughout. On top of this, the entire protocol was run through HTTP, leaving all data unencrypted and exposed to any actors willing to look.

Due to several of these predicaments the tester recommends that immediate action be taken in improving the status of the web application. The services need to be updated as soon as possible, leaving outdated and vulnerable software on a service such as this is asking for a disaster to happen. The login webpage should be revamped and secured. The password and username requirements should be more complex than they are currently, and the system should not specify whether the username or password information was incorrect to the user.

On top of these issues, the entire service should be moved to HTTPS protocol. HTTP has been known to cause issues with security and only ensures issues are ran into. The robots.txt file should be cleared and more useful information for bots should be implemented. Finally, there should be flags on the system software and the SQL code for the pages that prevent unwanted data such as cookies or errors displaying to users. Services such as file upload and plain text inputs should be sanitized to ensure no batch files or injections can cause critical service malfunctions. These issues should be handled as soon as possible due to their critical importance to services.

To close, Ricks Greasy Spoon has a responsibility to the consumer to have the proper care and respect that other modernized webpages provide. The data taken in by the service does not only impact those who utilize it but potentially any with immediate relation to them. Hackers only increase their knowledge and numbers with each passing day, running an out-of-date, vulnerable service for hundreds to thousands of clients is unacceptable. With these changes, the web application can guarantee proper security and functionality to the user's demand.

4 FUTURE WORK

In the coming months after the implementations have been forwarded and applied the tester recommends a second thorough testing to ensure that these changes properly mitigate the vulnerabilities mentioned. This rudimentary and regularly scheduled testing should be conducted several times throughout the year to ensure that the webpage remains above standard. This test can also detect new vulnerabilities that might have developed in the secondary development process. Ensuring this test is conducted will help to mitigate further damages caused by the previous vulnerabilities, allowing for Ricks Greasy Spoons to continue business as usual.
